ABSTRACT

Genealogy is the study of the descent of a family from an ancestor or ancestors. This selected list of books in the collections of the Library of Congress was compiled primarily for researchers of Afro-American lineages. The bibliography includes guidebooks, bibliographies, genealogies, collective biographies, U.S. local histories, directories, and other works pertaining specifically to Afro-Americans. The sources are listed geographically with citations to histories of Afro-Americans in U.S. cities, towns, counties, and states. Printed family histories and genealogies are major sources for this research, and 56 references by specific family names are included. (NL)

Introduction

Genealogy is the study of the descent of a person or family from an ancestor or ancestors, and research in this fascinating field begins with a desire to learn about one's origins. Interest in genealogical research among Afro-Americans has grown enormously in recent years. This fact is evidenced by the myriad of Afro-Americans who are actively researching their ancestry; the growing number of Afro-American family genealogies that are being published; the many Afro-American genealogical societies and interest groups that are forming; and the wide choice of workshops, conferences, and classroom lectures in Afro-American genealogy that are offered each year.

Despite this obvious interest in Afro-American genealogy, there are very few bibliographies of published sources specifically on this topic, and those tend to be limited in scope. The purpose of Generations Past is to fill the need for such a compilation. James Rose lists some published sources in Black Genesis, but his principal focus is on manuscript and other primary sources.

Generations Past is a selected list of books in the collections of the Library of Congress compiled primarily for researchers of Afro-American lineages. Included in this bibliography are guidebooks, bibliographies, genealogies, collective biographies, United States local histories, directories, and other works pertaining specifically to Afro-Americans. Emphasis is on books that contain information about lesser-known individuals of the nineteenth century and earlier, although Afro-American business and city directories published through 1959 are listed.

In general, the books selected contain genealogical information: names, dates, places, and often relationships. Other books provide historical or background information which may help to guide the researcher to find the data elsewhere. Periodical articles are cited only when books on a subject are unavailable.

Since this is not a comprehensive bibliography the researcher is advised to look for other books by searching catalogs and indexes in libraries under subject headings that begin with AFRO-AMERICAN and AFRO-AMERICANS and/or NEGRO and NEGROES. In addition, individual biographies, military histories, and books on other subjects such as slavery, historic events, professions and occupations, secret organizations, fraternal and benevolent societies, and churches and other social and religious institutions often provide useful genealogical information. More suggestions for research possibilities can be found throughout this bibliography.

Many of the sources listed herein may be found in public libraries. Researchers should seek help from their local librarian, if necessary.

Generations Past is intended for both the beginning and the experienced genealogist. It was compiled to illuminate the broad range of published material available for Afro-American genealogical research and to assist researchers in discovering their generations past.

Guides to Genealogical Research

Genealogical handbooks, guides, and manuals serve several purposes and can prove to be invaluable resources to most researchers, regardless of their level of experience. In general, these books acquaint the researcher with the methodology of genealogical research by addressing the fundamental procedures; describe the different types of records that provide genealogical information and tell where those records may be found; provide information about major genealogical collections; and suggest sources that are often overlooked. Equipped with this essential information, researchers can make optimum use of their time and may well better their chances for fruitful results.

Most of the books listed in this section deal exclusively with Afro-American genealogical research. However, those researching Afro-American families may find general guides to genealogical research to be extremely useful, as well.

Family Histories and Genealogies

One of the basic approaches to genealogical research is by family name, and printed family histories and genealogies are among the major avenues to this approach. Published research can contain a great deal of genealogical data, often spanning several generations of a line of descent. Many of these printed works are found in libraries with genealogical collections.

When looking for information in a library, researchers should first check to see if that library has a history or genealogy of the family of interest in order to avoid duplicating research that has already been done. However, researchers should keep in mind that primary or original source records should always be examined to verify the accuracy of the printed work.

The following is a list of printed Afro-American family histories and genealogies. It is arranged by surname or family name. Included are some cross-references indicating that information about a particular family may be found in a work listed under another surname.

This is not a comprehensive list. Many family histories and genealogies are privately printed and or are limited editions that are not sent to the Library of Congress. Sometimes these genealogies are deposited only in local libraries or in historical societies in the area where the family resided. Furthermore, until recently, no subject heading was in use in the Library of Congress that would conveniently bring together the Afro-American family histories and genealogies in the Library's genealogical collection; these were therefore extremely difficult to find. Such works were classified by family name with no reference to ethnicity, and this is probably the case at other libraries, as well. In 1985, the Library of Congress began to use the subject heading "Afro-Americans–Genealogy" for genealogical books about Afro-American families. To date there has been very little retrospective cataloging of Afro-American family histories published before 1985; family name continues to be the primary subject access to these earlier works.

Researchers may want to note that many Afro-American family histories have been published in both scholarly and general-interest periodicals such as the Negro History Bulletin and Ebony. No attempt was made to include such material in this bibliography.

Information Sources by State

Listed in this section are citations to histories of Afro-Americans in U. S. cities, towns, counties, and states; Afro-American city and business directories; indexes to the 1850 and 1860 census schedules that list slaveowners; indexes and abstracts of tax records that also list slaveowners; registers of slaves and free negroes; and a variety of other sources. The publications are arranged geographically by state.

Works of this nature provide an alternative approach to genealogical research which relates to the geographic location where one's ancestors lived. They usually provide fragmentary but useful information for compiling a family tree. Other local history sources, that is, those not exclusively about Afro-Americans, should not be ignored, since they may also contain a chapter, section or listing for Afro-Americans who lived in the area.

Genealogical Periodicals

Genealogical periodicals are a resource that is too often overlooked. They may contain a wide assortment of genealogical gems such as abstracts of wills, cemetery inscriptions, genealogies, census indexes, abstracts of church records, slave records, wills, and more.

Listed below are periodicals that focus on Afro-American genealogical research. Other genealogical and historical periodicals published by state and local historical and genealogical societies, family organizations, and independent publishers should also be consulted, since they frequently include articles of interest to researchers of Afro-American lineages.

Bibliography : v. 1, p. 179-200.

Contents: v. 1. From sundown to sunup : the making of the black community – v. 2-3. South Carolina narratives – 4-5. Texas narratives – v. 6. Alabama and Indiana narratives – v. 7. Oklahoma and Mississippi narratives – v. 8-10. Arkansas narratives – v. 11. Arkansas narratives, Missouri narratives – v. 12-13. Georgia narratives – v. 14-15. North Carolina narratives – v. 16. Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Ohio, Virginia, and Tennessee narratives – v. 17. Florida narratives – v. 18. Unwritten history of slavery (Fisk University) – v. 19. God struck me dead (Fisk University).

The first volume is an interpretive essay by George Rawick dealing with the conditions of life under slavery, into which he incorporated illustrative passages from the narratives. Appendixes to Vol. 1 include "Editor's Introduction to Volumes 2-19," front matter from the WPA's 1941 collection at the Library of Congress, and instructions to interviewers regarding interview structure and transcription in dialect. Volumes 2 through 17 are reprints of the slave narratives held in the Rare Book and Special Collections Division of the Library of Congress. These were prepared by the Federal Writers' Project 1936-1938, and assembled under the title Slave Narratives: A Folk History of Slavery in the United States From Interviews With Former Slaves.

E444 .A45 suppl. 1

Contents: v. 1. Alabama narratives – v. 2. Arkansas, Colorado, Minnesota, Missouri, and Oregon and Washington narratives – v. 3–4. Georgia narratives – v. 5. Indiana and Ohio narratives – v. 6–10. Mississippi narratives – v. 11. North Carolina and South Carolina narratives – v. 12. Oklahoma narratives.

Rawick and his associates became involved in the search for additional narratives not included in the LC's rare book collection (since transferred to the Manuscript Division) and enlisted the cooperation of archives, historical societies, and other depositories around the country. The material was transcribed by typists before it was reproduced here. In his "General Introduction" (p. [ix]–xlviii) Rawick discusses the problems associated with using the narratives for historical scholarship.

Catalogs and Guides to Major Afro-American Collections

Although material about Afro-Americans can be found in various types of libraries, some institutions have extensive and outstanding holdings of works that document Afro-American history and culture. Published catalogs and guides to these special collections may be especially useful resources to Afro-American family history researchers in identifying and locating material of interest. The entries in most of the catalogs and guides listed below are arranged by author, title, and subject, interfiled in a single alphabetic sequence.

Newspaper Resources

This section identifies guides to Afro-American newspapers. Newspapers in general, however, are an important resource to serious researchers, as they contain a storehouse of genealogical information, including birth and marriage announcements, death and legal notices, and other news accounts. Notices of slave sales and runaway-slave advertisements that often provide very detailed descriptions of the slaves may be found in some early American newspapers.

Genealogical Organizations

Societies and associations that promote interest in genealogical research are often helpful to researchers tracing their ancestry. Many sponsor educational programs, publish newsletters and journals, and plan activities of interest to genealogists. They also serve as a means by which members may share experiences and exchange information. Organizations that focus on Afro-American genealogical research are listed here.
